Darkfield Facilities

Darkfield Examination

Direct darkfield examination is quicker and gives better results than delayed darkfield examination. See the list of darkfield facilities on the preceding pages. If possible, take or send the patient to a place where the specimen can be taken and examined immediately.

Delayed darkfield facilities are provided for physicians to whom direct darkfield facilities are not conveniently available. Outfits for collection of lesion serum may be obtained from the New Jersey State Department of Health Laboratory at Trenton. Follow the directions given below. Specimens should be taken or sent by the quickest method either to a pathologist who gives this service or to the State Laboratory. The greater the time from collection of the specimen until its examination the greater is the chance of a falsely negative report.

Do not be satisfied with one negative darkfield examination. Take several specimens before considering the lesion darkfield negative. Then follow with blood tests for at least two months before ruling out syphilis. A positive darkfield examination by a competent person, using a properly taken specimen, proves the presence of syphilis, but even a series of negative darkfield examinations do not necessarily rule out the disease.

Never give any kind of antisyphilitic treatment before a definite diagnosis has been assured by a positive darkfield examination or positive blood tests or completely positive clinical evidence. The use of penicillin, arsenicals, bismuth, or mercury compounds, if used in advance either internally or externally, will confuse the diagnosis. When a darkfield is to be done sulfathiazole may be used orally for its effect on a sore which might be caused by some sulfa susceptible organism like the Ducrey bacillus.

Directions For Collecting Material From Lesion
To obtain reliable results follow the directions implicitly.

Wear rubber gloves. Cleanse the suspected chancre or lesion of secondary syphilis thoroughly with water to remove all crusts, pus or debris. Scraping with a scalpel may be necessary particularly if the lesion is in pre-ulcer stage. Try not to cause bleeding.

Remove all blood by repeated blotting with sterile gauze. Squeeze the lesion gently between the fingers and allow time for serum to ooze from the surface. Collect generous samples of CLEAR SERUM by capillary action in two or more of the tubes supplied.

Carefully seal both ends of each capillary tube with the special mixture of wax supplied in the capsule. The tubes must be kept horizontal until sealed with the wax to avoid loss of the specimen.

Repeated tests are desirable as failure to demonstrate the spirochetes does not exclude syphilis.

If an antiseptic or other local treatment has been administered, carry out the program detailed above, avoid further local antisepsis, and obtain additional serum samples every 24 hours for two more days.

Collection of Specimen From Chancre-Base or Regional Lymph Node

Serum specimens collected from the base of treated lesions or from the interior of enlarged regional lymph nodes are often found positive for treponema pallidum. Regional lymph gland puncture is especially desirable when oral chancres are suspected because other spirochetes, difficult to distinguish from treponema pallidum, are often found in normal mouths. In all cases select the most indurated, shotty nontender gland present in preference to a more fluctuating, inflammatory and tender gland.

Draw about 0.2 cc. of sterile saline into a 1 cc. sterile syringe using a 22- or 24 gauge needle.

Immobilize the gland by grasping it so that the skin is drawn tightly over it. Thrust the needle into the gland, rotate it gently to break apart some of the tissue at its tip, and inject the salt solution, taking care that the point of the needle remains in the gland. Draw into the syringe a few drops of the fluid from the glandular tissue.

the lesion with the needle point and direct it downward and toward the center of the chancre-base. The remainder of the procedure is exactly as explained above for obtaining a specimen from a gland.

The aspirated fluid (which should contain very little or no blood) may then be deposited from the needle onto a clean glass surface and collected in capillary tubes in the same manner as described for fluid from a chancre.

Submit also a specimen of blood for sero-diagnostic tests for syphilis in the outfit designed for that purpose. If the darkfields and the blood test are all reported negative, obtain additional blood tests every week for four weeks, and then every month for two additional tests, before ruling out syphilis.
